WASHINGTON.
FRIDAY, November 4, 1892.
CROSBY & CO., Editors.

THE EVENING STAR has a regular and constant circulation in Washington, and is the largest paper in the city. As a local news paper and Advertising Medium it has no competitor.

An interesting array of figures is given in the annual report of Capt. Fiebigler, in charge of the annual report of the District, to show what every good citizen of Washington believes, that the expenditures made on the city streets have not been an investment. It is doubtful, however, whether the matter has ever been put more plainly or forcibly than in Captain Fiebigler's tables. Since 1885 there has been an average annual expenditure of $474,285 on new street work and during that period there has been an annual increase of $6,523,321 or a total of over $400,000,000 in taxable valuations. One might suggest that this increase in taxable values was due more to other causes than to the new street work, but a very strong argument against this view is furnished in the fact that during the period preceding 1885, when the street work was confined to replacing old pavements and not to extending improvements to new streets, there was comparatively little increase in taxable values. The figures of course go to strengthen an appeal to our lawmakers for liberal appropriations for street improvements. A similar relation between increased valuations and street improvements is shown to exist in the suburban districts. Capt. Fiebigler's report contains some most excellent recommendations and suggestions well worthy of the attention of Congress and of citizens who are interested in the municipal affairs. He urges as a means to accelerate the improvement of streets, which may not be reached in the ordinary course of work for many years, the extension of the permit system to roadways, as well as to sidewalks and alleys. He gives emphasis to the appeal which has gone up from the citizens of railroad blighted sections for the abolition of grade crossings, urging as a temporary remedy the adoption of the best expedients to protect life at such crossings, and as a permanent remedy the elevation of the tracks. The report besides giving a most satisfactory view of the present condition of the city, in respect of surface improvements and the various stages by which it has been brought about, shows what yet remains to be done, and makes thoughtful suggestions as to the means to be adopted in carrying on the great work of completing and extending the capital city.

The purely speculative view of university or college life which presents it as a microcosm of the greater life without it is often misleading. There has been much moonshine shed by idealists on this subject. The university is not a microcosm of the world, as some of its most ardent advocates are largely of this sort of light. The social reformer is all the better for a liberal education, and a liberal education in its full sense is obtained chiefly by associated effort of a number of studious but practical people. It will not answer to be studious alone or practical alone, for reform is not a fad of the fastidious or a cult of the most intellectual, but a vital force which comes from the brain and heart of the stronger into the general mass by means of first crude, but afterward better and better adapted to the purpose. A writer in the Andover Review hits off roundly a great truth when he says "the time has come when the educated man and the educated woman must no longer merely shelter and turn away from the dark depths of life. Young graduates entering into social work are in especial danger of being too narrowly critical of the efforts of sagacious people who have had a different sort of training for life than they. The first and constant effort of the settlement should be to have its men or women come into relations of friendship and intimacy with the people in their homes." Here is the gospel of good sense touching social reform in a nut shell. The same writer insists with reason that the name "university settlement" should not be "exclusive" of other forces at work on the problem of social reform in the vicinity or under the patronage of a literary institution should include elements not directly connected in general work with the institution—should co-operate, in fact, with all the effective moral forces to be found laboring on the same problem. The Star is convinced that much more can be done in this land under the benediction of its political freedom for the social advantage of the poor and unfortunate, the misguided and wretched, by intelligent practical associations—call them university settlements or by any other name—than in any, even the most favored of foreign nations. The comparative success of such experiments in England emboldens American workers to vie with the mother country in the undertaking and carrying out of important measures of reform in the slums of the great cities.

The last week of the campaign shows the usual activity in both parties, the usual claims of sweeping the earth and the usual nervous feeling, read between the lines of all the partisans as on the situation. Besides, the last week gives the usual quantity of startling charges of bribery, intimidation, force and fraud, displayed in the party papers with screaming headlines. Not only so. The converts on each side are busy announcing their conversion to an afflicted but patient public. In fact all the ordinary characteristics of a presidential election are now distinctly visible just as if this were not the exceptional campaign of education and deliberation thought that everybody has conceded it to be since last June. Presidential campaigns seem to have a certain amount of bottled up energy; if let off early there is less animation in the finish, and vice versa. The energy is now being unbotled.

Spain is not now as pacific in its internal condition as it was. When the queen regent refuses to visit a town which has made elaborate preparations for her reception the inhabitants tear down the triumphal arches and demolish the royal platform, uttering all the while revolutionary cries. It is on such evidence as this that other nations question the capacity of the Spaniards for self-government.

Commissioner Douglas expresses the belief that the contractor owns the garbage. It is to be hoped that the contractor will exercise his full proprietary rights and round up his possessions promptly and permanently.

The confidence of some prophesies, in the face of uncertainty, leads to the belief that this campaign of education will teach a great many people things of which they were previously ignorant.

Washington is willing to do her full share in the interests of science, but she draws the line at being the victim when rain-makers feel the necessity of "trying it on a dog."

The statisticians of both parties exhibit much annoyance over the possibility of having their figures upset by the iniquities of the other side.

One thing to be said in favor of political rainbow chasers is that they do not use loud and boisterous bombs in their operations.

The close of the laus tri will give that young man a chance to devote some time to managing his bump of discretion.

A conspicuous shrinkage in the output of force-bill and wild-cat currency comment may be looked for at an early date.

Kansas politicians are warned to beware of the seductive blandishments of "mixed tickets."

New York is enveloped in fog atmospherically and politically.

Is it a game on both sides of bluff and grope?
